

Summer 2022 Dissertation Award

Deadline: February 25, 2022

The Graduate School is pleased to announce the competition for Summer 2022 Dissertation Award for advanced Ph.D. students. The award provides summer support to advanced Ph.D. students while they work full-time on their dissertations. Consideration will be given to Ph.D. candidates who have an approved prospectus on file, with any necessary IRB or IACUC approvals in place, by February 25, 2022, and who anticipate defending their dissertations by May 31, 2023. Former recipients of a Summer Dissertation Award are ineligible. The application requires the signed endorsement of the dissertation advisor, confirming that the student has sufficient resources and faculty support to conduct full-time dissertation work during the summer and an up-to-date Annual Review/IDP.

Eligibility

Consideration for awards will be given to Ph.D. students who:

- Have satisfied all the requirements for their degrees except the final dissertation defense;
- Have not exceeded the seven-year limit for completion;
- Have completed sufficient work on their dissertation projects, plus have resources and faculty support in place to devote full-time to completing and defending their dissertations by May 31, 2023. Students who plan to defend in Spring/Summer 2022 are not eligible.
- Have not previously received a Summer Dissertation Award;
- Have been continuously enrolled following a successful prospectus defense.

Terms and Conditions of the Award

- The award period is Summer 2022.
- The award provides a stipend of $5,000.
- Students must agree to commit full-time to their dissertations.
- Students may not accept other forms of employment during the award period.
- Students will be required to pay back the stipend for failure to devote full time to their dissertations.
- Application deadline is February 25, 2022 by 5:00 pm.
- Award notifications will be announced in writing by April 29, 2022.
- Recipients are required to provide a brief report, co-signed by the dissertation advisor, on achievements during the award period. This report is due by August 31, 2022 to karen.schramm@wayne.edu.

Application Requirements

- Completed application form, summarizing the dissertation project and progress to date in non-technical language.
- A supporting letter from the dissertation advisor confirming the student has sufficient resources, including faculty support, to engage in full-time dissertation work during the Summer 2022, and, in all likelihood, will defend prior to May 31, 2023.
- The Graduate Director's signature confirming support of this application.
- A completed annual review for 2020-21 (<https://gradschool.wayne.edu/students/professional-development/annual-review>), showing evidence of professional development activity beyond the classroom, such as conference presentations, publications, grant writing, performance or exhibitions.

Criteria for Judging Applications

- Dissertation progress and likelihood of completion
 - Statement of purpose or research question in non-technical language
 - Articulation of specific aims, key objectives, or hypotheses
 - Significance of the dissertation research/scholarly activity
 - Summarizes work completed to date and outlines plans for completing the project, including a time line of activities through the projected date of defense
- Advisor and program support
- Evidence of professional development, including but not limited to the following:
 - Publications and other scholarly works (including in press and manuscripts submitted)
 - Discipline-specific conference participation (include dates)
 - Career development activities (such as attending professional development seminars hosted by OVPR, Graduate School, departments, etc...)
